E1-2: carinated wide-mouthed cups/bowls with multiple cordons.
One of the most common of carinated forms, this is usually much larger than any normal cup sizes, and is one form that is at home in Kent as elsewhere. It tends to be straight-sided or gently curving in Essex and Kent, and often larger and very angular in Herts.; there are some red-surfaced examples, in Zone 7, but it is not one of the forms made in the Northants. kilns, unlike El-1.

Its relationship with the Gallo-Belgc form Cam.51 is apparent in some of the Herts, examples (e.g. Weston) and a Cam.51 is known from Prae Wood; but the exact link is uncertain. They are both related to wood and shale turned shapes, and I would rather see Cam.51 deriving from a continental version of El-2 than vice versa (see Hatt 1949, pi.VII no. 15; wide-mouthed, not squat, with omphalos base; La Tène III, not yet early Gallo-Roman).

The earliest dated context for El-2 is the late 1st century BC at Braughing. The list shows the range of contexts and dates: it was very popular in settlements and burials. At Sheepen they are all Period I, pre-43, and some residual to AD 61.

The type trays have substantial sherds in thick native grog, all carinations, one very angular like the Herts, variety, with turning lines, one footless, and one mica-dusted inside and out. Not many occur in post-43 contexts: one is debased and curving (South Ockendon) and one is in a Roman fabric (Abington Pigotts).
