

MONUMENTAL BRASSES IN KENT.

BY RALPH GRIFFIN, F.S.A.

UP to the present time no paper in Archæologia Cantiana has dealt in general with brasses in Kent, or in particular with the brasses in any church, and it may be well to pass in review shortly what has already been done elsewhere to illustrate the subject so far as it relates to the county. Every writer on monumental brasses has sooner or later to acknowledge indebtedness to Mr. Mill Stephenson, F.S.A., so I may as well begin by pointing out that a paper by him on Kentish Brasses in the 5th volume of Transactions of the St. Paul's Ecclesiological Society at p. 129 is, as a general conspectus of the whole matter, most informing and completely satisfactory. By his permission I can also give a list he has made giving a rough approximation to the number of brasses which still exist in the churches of Kent so far as at present known, and it is improbable that any large addition will be made to it from further discoveries. This is followed by another list, also by Mr. Mill Stephenson, of certain interesting details which call for notice.

This list includes lost brasses of which rubbings exist. Brasses after A.D. 1700 are not as a rule included.

Interest in monumental brasses seems to have developed towards the end of the eighteenth century, but it was left to Thomas Fisher, F.S.A., a Kentish artist, to discover that the only way to reproduce them accurately was from a "dab" or rubbing afterwards reduced to scale in the finished drawing. His productions may be compared with the caricatures in Nichols' Leicestershire. Many of Fisher's rubbings have been preserved in the collection of the Society of Antiquaries, where are also some of his finished drawings. These drawings seem to have been disposed of at his sale (catalogue in the British Museum), and many found their way into a collection now in the British Museum of illustrations connected with Kent in the Additional MSS. 32,353—32,375. Fisher, as a rule, is careful not only to give a sketch of the brass remaining, but to draw it to scale and to shew what (if any) was lost. These sketches, made about 1800, are of the greatest value. Fisher also published certain plates of brasses which are all noted in Haines,* as are also the representations of Kentish brasses (two) published in the illustrations issued between 1841 and 1846 by the Cambridge Camden Society, and the ten which appeared in the series issued by Messrs. Waller between 1840 and 1864. Any person desiring fuller information about these latter works may consult a paper in the Transactions of the Monumental Brass Society, vol. v., p. 180. In those Transactions much information about Kentish brasses will be found, and in the Portfolio of that Society have appeared some eight excellent reproductions of Brasses from this county. In the Portfolio of the Oxford University Brass Rubbing Society the only illustration from Kent is the priest at Westwell.

It is curious that, though Kent is on the whole one of the richest counties in memorials remaining of this class, only one work is devoted, so far as I am aware, to Kentish brasses alone. This is a book called Kentish Brasses collected by Mr. W. D. Belcher in two volumes, the first published in 1888, the second in 1905. It is impossible not to regret that a work on which clearly much pains was spent, and which must have cost the author heavy expense, was not better done. The letterpress in the first volume is quite inadequate; at times it is misleading; in the second volume there is none at all. The index is of the very worst. There is no indication where in the Church named the brass illustrated was found. Bits of one brass are in the illustrations put in another. Shields and other details are omitted, and no attempt is made in the majority of instances to shew the indent of what was lost where such an indent remained. Any one taking the trouble to compare Mr. Belcher's reproduction on p. 7 of Vol. I. of the remains of the Clitherow brass at Ash with the much smaller one in Planché's Corner of Kent (London: 1864, 8vo.), p. 207, will see at once how much the interest of the reproduction is diminished by Mr. Belcher's mode of procedure, and he seems himself to have had some doubts after the publication of his first volume, for in the second he does at times indicate the indents of parts lost when the rubbing was made, but in that volume many of the illustrations are quite inadequate to illustrate even what remains. On the other hand it can be said that Mr. Belcher was at considerable pains to visit all the Churches where he could hear of brasses existing, and in fact he only misses 16 Churches altogether out of the 219 where brasses occur,* though he sometimes omits a brass in a Church where he has reproduced other brasses.†

Though Mr. Belcher's is the only work devoted to Kent alone, it is desirable to refer to one or two general works on the subject of Brasses which have numerous illustrations from Kent. It is not necessary to refer to the well known works by Boutell or the Manual of Monumental Brasses published in 1861 by the Rev. Herbert Haines, the latter being the standard authority by which everybody works. In more recent years the Rev. H. W. Macklin has, in the series known as The Antiquary's Books, published a manual of The Brasses of England which has gone through several editions, as well as a smaller manual, and Mr. Herbert Druit has published a Manual of Costume as illustrated by Monumental Brasses (8vo., London, 1906). These works leave little to be desired, which cannot be said of a book by Mr. E. R. Suffling, English Church Brasses (8vo., London, 1910). Unfortunately Mr. Suffling lacked sufficient antiquarian equipment, and the book is full of blunders, and cannot be relied on. The illustrations, too, are often cramped by considerations of space, and shields and other details appear where they should not. Another work of the same description is Ancient Memorial Brasses, by Mr. E. T. Beaumont (Humphrey Milford, 1913, 8vo.). Like Mr. Suffling, the author lacks equipment, and makes many mistakes which should have been avoided. For instance, Mr. Beaumont, finding "De bello campo" in an inscription, translates it "From the battle-field." The book cannot be commended, though the illustrations are fair. Not many Kentish examples are given.

* Bearsted, Bekesbourne, Canterbury (S. Mildred), Charlton by Woolwich, Cowden, Darenth, High Halden, Hadlow, Petham, Rochester (S. Nicholas), Shoreham, Throley, Thuratham, Wilmington, Wittersham, Wouldham.

† E.g., at Biddenden three are omitted.

Amongst the shilling manuals issued by the Cambridge University Press is one published in 1912 on Brasses by Mr. J. S. M. Ward. It is satisfactory so far as it goes, being largely founded on Mr. Macklin's book mentioned above. Of the twenty-five illustrations five are from Kent.

Our member Mr. George Clinch is the author of many popular handbooks on antiquarian subjects which he frequently illustrates from Kentish brasses.
