

Obituary.

JAMES MAWDESLEY BRANDER.

By the untimely death of James Brander, the Society has lost a good friend and a keen archæologist who could but ill be spared.

He had a deep-rooted objection to the custom of making a private life public property in an obituary notice, and for his friends in many walks of life it will be sufficient to recall the words of one of them :—

“ He was ‘ Jimmy ’ at the Club ; always stood up when he had to speak in Committee, which was only when he had something of real moment to say, and to most of us he will be remembered by the peaceful way in which he would sleep, anywhere and at any time.”

We can pay his memory no higher compliment than to say that he is greatly missed.
